

5 Blind Doobie Boys

5 Blind Doobie Boys is an investment firm that specializes in successful investing. The founders, Jeff Stribling, Jessen Yu, and Charlie Graham built the firm's reputation with such novel tactics as dressing up as superheroes to showcase their investing prowess, smashing computers to show their disdain for the myriad wannabe internet investors, and throwing marshmallows at companies they perceived as too soft. Together with their newest member, Martin Reinfried, pilfered from another successful firm, they have undoubtedly reached elite status in the investment world. Though 5 Blind Doobie Boys has sometimes been mocked and derided for their unusual approach by the other firms, nobody can argue with their success.

5 Blind Doobie Boys focuses on helping great inventors with great ideas bring their inventions to fruition. We not only provide financial backing but, more importantly, we help navigate the myriad problems and dilemmas that are inevitably involved in bringing an idea to market. 5 Blind Doobie Boys' focus on the "first to market" advantage is legendary and our record speaks for itself.

Our Team

Charlie Graham, M.B.A:

Charlie Graham earned his MBA from Mad Business school and quickly showed his aptitude in various other forms of Madness, such as Mad Science and Mad Literature. Mr. Graham (MBA) has brought his unique set of skills to bear on many successful ventures, including MegaHard, the Genome venture, and the 420 project. Though his degree (MBA) may pigeonhole him as a numbers man, Graham is a multi-talented associate and seasoned investor whose skills in the boardroom and on the road are equally impressive.

Jessen Yu:

Jessen Yu came to 5 Blind Doobie Boys from the highly successful D'Oh! Boys Labs (DBL). While at D'Oh! Boys, Mr. Yu led the highly secretive Amnesia project, which as we all remember, we don't remember. Through his years at DBL, Mr. Yu participated in numerous profitable ventures, culminating in DBL's record-shattering return from the Jackpot project. As DBL exited the scene at the top of its game, Mr. Yu spent several years freelancing as an angel investor before joining forces with Graham (MBA) and Stribs to found 5 Blind Boys.

Martin Reinfried:

Martin Reinfried began investing as early as 1991 and produced Improbable returns for years from such investments as King Arthur, Magic, and Star Wars. Reinfried got his reputation as a cocky bastard when he spent the launch of his next investment, The Green Project, sitting in a hot tub smoking weed, so sure was he of its success. This led to his investment in the 420 Project, which perfectly timed the proliferation of medicinal marijuana dispensaries, followed by Jackpot, wildly successful because it lured customers into spending $400 for a product that was shiny and fun, but basically useless after two days. His latest investment in the Shinteki Conglomerate is what got the attention of 5 Blind Boys, where he is the latest star investor. His one demand for joining was changing the firm's name to 5 Blind Doobie Boys, readily accepted by the partners, who expect more “high” returns in the years to come.

Stribs:

Stribs is an almost mythic figure in the investment community. A maverick in his early days, he was half of the astonishingly lucrative Red 5 partnership. Using a dynamic combination of speed, agility, brains, and a Porsche Boxter, Red 5 danced circles around other firms, and secured a lead investment role in the Mega-successful MegaHard. Today, Stribs has become a prominent leader in the investment community, known for his incisiveness and intuition, matched only by his enthusiasm and foot speed.
