Record-setting Accolades!

TJG awarded its 6th consecutive Zweibel

By ERIC PRESTEMON

Last night, at the 87th annual Zweibel awards ceremony, The Judean GNUs won its 6th consecutive Zweibel for Outstanding Journalism and other Writing Type Stuff. This unprecedented achievement has shocked and amazed the entire world.

Formed only 6 years ago, TJG has won the prestigious award each of the years it has been eligible. Asked the secret of the newspaper's success, editor-in-chief, Jonathan McCue resonds, "We're not afraid to ask the tough questions and we always follow the story no matter where it goes or who it may embarrass. Just ask Lindsay Lohan if you don't believe me."

Eric Prestemon is the lead investigative journalist responsible for many of the best scoops that TJG reports. With his many years in the field, he has established contacts around the world in a multitude of professions from baristas to security guards. And despite his gloried reputation, he's not above sifting through garbage when the story requires it.

Another way the distinguished news organization separates itself from the rest is with outstanding attention to detail and a meticulous research department headed up by Cynthia Wong. No matter the subject, there is a chance she will know the information offhand and if she doesn't, she can quickly look it up on Wikipedia.

But in this modern age of multimedia, raw facts and the printed word cannot compete with the latest Youtube videos. To add color to the black-and-white text, TJG relies on the skills of famed photojournalist, Kekoa Proudfoot. He is a master of the candid and upskirt photo.

The Judean GNUs is known worldwide for covering the most technical scientific research, the most heinous crimes and the most mundane human interest stories. Whether its the latest in human cloning or your cat being rescued from a tree, their motto proves true: "You'll always be glad you knew the news by the Judean GNUs."

Mysterious happenings at Trenchwood

Doctor Wesley When once again in the public eye

By JONATHAN MCCUE

Not much has been heard from Dr. Wesley When since he was ostracized from the scientific community over 20 years ago. He started up Trenchwood Institute, an non-profit organization with the self-proclaimed goal of "bringing you tomorrow's technology today". Despite this grandiose vision, no technology has emerged from the institute and it along with its eccentric leader have all but been forgotten.

However, with reports of large-scale power outages and a recent press release from Trenchwood, Dr. When may once again be in the center of a scientific controversy. Dr. When was unavailable for comment but key insiders have revealed

Meet the Press

JONATHAN MCCUE
Editor-in-chief

Master of undercover work. Extremely dangerous. Able to hoodwink simply by winking. A once respected international war correspondent, he retired from active reporting when a slight misunderstanding was severely overblown and he was banned from 71 countries. Now serves as editor-in-chief.

ERIC PRESTEMON
Investigative Journalist

Fearred investigator known for uncovering the story no matter how well hidden or how many so-called facts contradict him. Has been known to obtain on-the-record quotes from the most unlikely of sources, even those thought previously dead. His most frequently cited source goes only by the name Fuzzy Dunlop.

CYNTHIA WONG
Researcher

Anime lover who knows everything about the Japanese culture. Reads every manga available even hentai. Well, especially hentai actually. Sometimes exclusively. Master of Google-fu and able to find facts to fit any story.

KEKOA PROUDFOOT
Photojournalist

Prominent photojournalist whose work has appeared in National Geographic, Amish Crafts and Highlights for Children. Famously documented the practice of deep underwater basket-weaving. Currently working side jobs filming Japanese porn videos.
